

Contents

Foreword	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
Executive summary	x
Chapter 1: Introduction
What is teaching as inquiry?	1
The importance of addressing the needs of priority learners	9
The importance of school leadership	12
Secondary Student Achievement project	15
Chapter 2: Developing the TAI process
Identifying students' needs	19
Being intentional by focusing on four to five students	21
Focusing on pedagogical changes	24
Narratives as support for inquiry	26
Feedback loops for evaluating TAI	28
Summary	30
Chapter 3: Case studies
Characteristics of the case study schools	32
Sorting out what makes a difference	34
School A	36
School B	49
School C	62
Summary	77
Chapter 4: Influences on pedagogical development
The role of the facilitators	80
Being willing to make changes, and being flexible	84
Developing and using feedback loops	86
Keeping perspective	86
Summary	89
Chapter 5: Developing a learning community
Supporting the team	91
Incremental versus large-scale change	93
Changes related to literacy	95
Changes to assessment practices	96
Changes related to culturally responsive teaching	97
Integrating changes with existing initiatives in a community of learning	100
Summary	102

Chapter: 6 Key findings
Key enablers for priority learners	105
Key enablers for teachers and middle learners	106
Key enablers for professional learning communities	109
Summary	114
Chapter 7: Recommendations for enhancing the implementation of TAI
1. What have we learned from this project?	116
2. Given the benefits of TAI, what are the next steps for enhancing actions so that TAI is more sustainable?	123
3. How can leaders support effective continued professional learning?	124
4. How can we use TAI more effectively to address equity issues?	127
Conclusion	127
References	129
Biographical information	133
Index	134